ABSTRACT

An instructional guide on how to use an index introduces this 15 year index to "The Goldfinch," a magazine of Iowa history for young people. The index includes persons and subjects that have appeared in the publication from 1975-1990. A list of the main topics featured in each issue also appears. (DB)

How To Use An Index

There are two things to know about an index. One is that it is a list of subjects --ideas, objects, events, people, and activities. The other is that the list is in alphabetical order.

The list can be the tricky part, because sometimes you can't find the word that makes sense to you, but if you look under another word, you'll discover that a lot of information is available.

When you use an index to find information, remember to think of other words that mean what you want to find. Also, think about larger topics. You won't find "tractor" in the index, but you'll find "Farms and Farming."

For example, the page here is the first page of an article about some habits of Des Moines children. If you read through the article, you learn about media, WOI, graphs, and averages. But to locate this article in the index, you need to look under "Television and radio," "Film," and "Children, leisure activities."

Indexes can help you find a lot of useful information. Write us if you have suggestions for making this index better for you.

What were the kids doing?

Art by Katy Chambers

How we spend our time is how we live our lives. In Des Moines in January 1950, 5th and 7th graders were asked questions about their time with media [ways of communicating to many people]. One month later, Iowa's first television station, WOI, began to broadcast.

Eight years later, in 1958, the very same questions were asked of 5th and 7th graders. Some answers had changed a little and some changed quite a lot.

Graph warning

Graphs such as the ones below might make you think that every 5th grader in 1958 watched almost four hours of TV daily. That wasn't true. Some watched for only one half hour, and others watched for six hours. What the graph shows are averages [all of the hours of watching divided by all of the children who watched].

Some of the children who were asked the questions said "no" for an answer. They didn't read, listen, or watch that kind of media. Under each of the dates below are two numbers—the darker one is the number of children who were asked the question, the lighter one is the number who said no to that kind of media.

How many movies do you see in a month?
